Students are expected to be on campus only for final exams and assessments that require in-person attendance—for example, a proctored exam, presentations that cannot be submitted by video, etc.

If a final project is due the week before or the day of the final, students do not need to come to the building unless the activity during the final exam block is a part of the final assessment that students must complete in person.

Proctored spaces with limited seating capacity will be made available for students who need to be dropped off early but do not have a test/assessment.

If a student misses a final exam Liane Rae, Assistant Principal of Curriculum and Instruction and counselors will work with individual students to develop an academic plan to get them caught up (including rescheduling exams).
